

Regulatory affairs consultants to our new office in Malmö

Sofus has grown to become the leading regulatory affairs consultancy firm in the Nordics. We have decided to take the next step and establish an office in the Öresund region. We are therefore looking for experienced regulatory affairs professionals to our new office in Malmö.

We are now part of Xendo, an international, growing consulting company that is well established in regulatory affairs, product development and GMP, as well as pharmacovigilance for both (bio)pharmaceuticals and medical devices.

We are big enough to have built a good reputation after working with more than 250 pharmaceutical and biotechnology companies worldwide. Nevertheless, we are small enough to ensure that all employees are recognized and their contributions valued and appreciated.

With us, you work with national and international regulatory issues throughout the product lifecycle. You will be able to both develop your skills along with some of the best in the field and work with stimulating and highly qualified tasks in cooperation with regulatory departments at companies throughout Europe.

Your background

We are looking for someone that has worked with regulatory affairs for a couple of years, either at a marketing company or a head office. You are looking for new opportunities and want to combine your knowledge and skills with the latest in drug development from a regulatory perspective. Danish language skills are an advantage.

We offer an independent role with challenging and varied tasks, customer contacts and with great opportunities to actively participate in the company's continued development.

For more information, contact Lovisa Rosenquist, tel: +468-56002024.

Please send us your CV and a personal letter as soon as possible, but at the latest by 15 December 2017, to: recruitments@sofus.se

We will hold interviews during the application period.
